Understanding Medical Marijuana Laws

Priscillia Hunt, Ph.D.
Associate Economist, RAND
phunt@rand.org

Priscillia Hunt (Ph.D.) is an Associate Economist at the RAND Corporation and a Research Fellow at the Institute for the Study of Labor (IZA). Priscillia’s research interests focus on the interaction between criminal law and economics, with particular interests on the economic implications of criminal justice strategies (mainly at the police and court phases) and illicit and licit drug supply and consumption policies. She has expertise in developing and implementing research designs to understand drug markets and extensive knowledge of crime and criminal justice data issues. Priscillia is currently an Investigator for a project led by Dr. Rosalie Liccardo Pacula that examines the influence medical marijuana laws have on supplier and consumer behavior to provide a more comprehensive, yet concise understanding of the types of laws and their influence on health behaviors.

http://www.cdrewu.edu/research/DrugAddictionResearch